Workshop Committee

Spelt Workshop Title: Storyboards and Comics for eLearning

Periodical Comics are considered to be a source of entertainment, but we can make these comics meaningful for our students. Using storyboarding, which is a tool for producers in the media production process, we can help learners explore their creativity to create meaningful content, and that too for educational purposes. Language development tasks becomes more enjoyable, and more interesting for creative and content-based writing. Storyboards and comics are trending visuals that engages teachers and learner to determine the best way to produce content with a limited and allocated timeframe, making the activity an attractive assessment tool. Therefore, it becomes possible to engage students in active learning and assessment because it allows their individuality to emerge; and teachers can clearly identify the learning outcomes that have been achieved.

Upcoming Workshop

TARGET AUDIENCE: All Teachers, Coordinators, Principals and Heads	While online classes provide students with more flexibility and new ways to collaborate, success in the online environment is directly related to how present and engaged both the instructor and the students are in the virtual classroom. When students are engaged, they tend to perform better. When students are actively engaged in the material, they tend to process it more deeply, which leads to successful retention of the material.
Facilitator: Aida Tasneem Webinar Moderator: Dr. Bushra Ahmed Khurram
Date: January 16, 2021 Time: 3:00pm – 6:00pm	Being present in your online class is not only about good practice and supporting student learning and engagement. Instructor presence and communication make the difference between a course categorized as distance education and a correspondence course. Both communication and collaboration must be made initiated by the teacher and not the student. The theory behind this concept along with some tools that can be used to make classrooms engaging will be explained in this 3 hour workshop.
