

Using Guided Discovery in English Lessons

These days, language teaching has evolved into a science, and teacher is now a scientist who researches, tests, and occasionally even creates the best learning methods for their students. This process of making discoveries is not only important for teachers, but for students as well. Thus, Guided Discovery is a contemporary approach that encourages learning through empowerment by adopting a particular style of instruction. As a result, the student is set on their own course of research and creation. Being a learner-centered approach to language teaching, it inspires students to explore classroom resources, educational materials, and their untapped potential through increased participation in the classroom. On one hand, guided exploration encourages student participation; on the other, it gives students a sense of empowerment, autonomy, and self-reliance.

This webinar will emphasize the use of heuristic learning strategies in place of conventional teacher-centered classroom techniques while showcasing the use of guided discovery in a language learning classroom.
