Call for Papers (Research Journal)

The Call invites practitioners, researchers, administrators to submit their work (research, practice) and professional identities (researcher, practitioner) as mutually informing and beneficial to ELT. Our global readership will include teachers, linguists, educators, and those interested in English Language Teaching in local and global contexts and second language acquisition. Our goal is to collect, inform and disseminate information from authors to readership on latest trends in the ELT.

Please click the link shared below for complete information related to the submission.

A Peep into the Upcoming Issue

Pauline Ernest and Joseph Hopkins's article 'Teaching in the Time of COVID: Some Suggestions for Facilitating the Transition from Face-to-Face to Online Learning' gives an explicit description of the online tools available to teach English language. The Spanish English language teachers and trainers introduce the readers to the 'ICT-REV Inventory of ICT Tools' that aims to assist teachers in selecting appropriate online applications according to the teaching objectives and learners' needs. The article also gives specific recommendations and suggestions to make online language teaching more effective.

Suzie Ryu, Korean English language teacher and action researcher, in her article 'Google Classroom Experience in the Secondary School of South Korea (EFL Classes) during COVID-19 Crisis' elucidates the importance of LMS amid pandemic. She finds the LMS 'Google Classroom' user friendly and supportive in enhancing knowledge and supplementing teaching. In her article Suzie highlights the ways in which this LMS is promoted in Korean EFL classes and shares reflections of the students with regards to the efficacy of the system.
