

Role of a Teacher in Promoting Emotional Intelligence

The traditional education system used to rely on academic qualifications, technical competencies, and professional skills. A person having any one of these accomplishments was regarded as an expert. However, with constantly changing world dynamics, degrees/technical/professional skills alone do not guarantee a successful life.

In the Modern world, we have to face new challenges and numerous struggles daily. To be successful, we need to be more challenging and have stronger personalities; only then would we be able to meet the world's pressures and live happily.

Managing one's emotions is the essential trait of a strong person. People who work on their feelings well, are socially aware of others' emotions, and have healthier relationships are emotionally intelligent.

Teachers are considered role models as they hold an important place in students' psyches. They have the power to shape the minds of upcoming generations; hence, it is their responsibility to train these minds for life and educate them accordingly with Emotional Intelligence to have a worthwhile & harmonious life.

As teachers/educationists, it is vital to promote "Emotional Intelligence" among students. This training session will highlight its importance for both teachers and students. In addition, it will provide tips, tools, and strategies to develop Emotional Intelligence in a classroom for students.
