For the language classroom, content like the United Nations Sustainability Goals (UNSDGs) may seem daunting, impractical, even controversial. That said, with so many organizations incorporating them into their operations, the Goals are important to study and understand. My objectives in this workshop are not only to show activities that can be done to raise awareness of the UNSDGs, but also to show how this content can be used to improve the linguistic skills of learners. In particular, I will introduce activities that place a focus on listening, speaking, reading, and writing. Participants will be encouraged to lend their knowledge and expertise to craft some original activities that incorporate all four language skills using the UNSDGs content

Wayne Malcolm, Ed.D., is an Assistant Professor at Fukui University of Technology where he teaches English language skills. He is also a member of the Board of Directors for the Japan Association for Language Teaching (JALT), serving as the Director of Program.
